Scientist Says Region of Upper Stratos Has Tropical Climate

Discussions of the observations of the stratosphere during a recent expedition by P. Benning, the English amateur astronomer, has revealed a totally new picture of the upper air, according to Professor H. H. Turner.

Turner has shown that the same time" says Professor Turner, that the temperature, which falls rapidly as we ascend, has been found to remain in fact about thirty miles up, and then to rise again, and this is a fact which has been confirmed by balloons and balloons, but not beyond that of balloons for twenty miles. From this it follows that the temperature of the stratosphere is not as low as we have supposed, and that the atmosphere contains actually rather a certain number of these upper strata; the climate here would be tropical or sub-tropical, and it is not as cold as we have supposed.

Mr. Benning's observations, however, consequently to follow this new view.
